

On behalf of my ISP, Sonic.net, and other independent ISPs. I believe in free enterprise. I do not wish to see large corporations take over the market that was established by small firms who worked very hard and diligently to improve the internet experience and access to the internet. I oppose any regulation which would allow a large corporation to refuse service of broadband access through independent ISPs. My experience with the former Pacbell.net was poor at best, and I have no wish to accept service as it is provided by such companies as BellSouth, SBC, and the like. Their offerings as ISPs are too limited. I receive excellent service and support from my ISP, Sonic.net, and the prices for the service are competitive, which would not be the case if companies like BellSouth could refuse to sell services through independent ISPs. Thanks for consideration.
